

MC1 is energetic but doesn't understand the song meanings. . MC 2 more chill and trying to explain.

The Chordbuster March

MC1: I love that song, you know what it means, right? (drops into a karate stance) Busting chords! Hi-YAH!
(chops the air) Take that, you G-major!

MC2: Whoa, whoa! What are you doing?

MC1: Chord busting! You grab the chord, you give it a little (karate chop) and BOOM. Chord's busted. I think I saw it in a movie.

MC2: No, no, no. Nobody is fighting a chord. It's like "bust a move." You know, when you're dancing and you bust a move?

MC1: Oh. So busting a chord is when you... (mimes a dance move)

MC2: Kind of! It means you really go for it in the song . You sing with attitude and energy, and you show off a little. Busting a move is for dancing, busting a chord is for music.

MC1: Ohhh. So nobody's getting hurt?

MC2: Nope. Not even the G-major chord.

MC1: (relieved) Okay, good. Because I was getting nervous about our next song. It's called "Fight Song," and I was like, "Wow, this concert is intense."

MC2: Bro.

MC1: (back in karate stance) Just sayin', I'd better get warmed up!

MC2: Holster those hands, karate kid! "Fight Song" isn't about fighting people. It's about the fight inside you. Like when something feels hard, maybe a test, a big competition, or a new school. And you decide you're not giving up.

MC1: So it's like... fighting for yourself, not against somebody else?

MC2: Exactly! It's about overcoming your own doubts and finding your strength.

MC1: (lowers hands, nodding) Okay, that's actually pretty cool. I can get behind that. I'm disarming the karate chops.

MC2: Thank you.

MC1: (quietly) Can I just keep one for the end of Fight Song?

MC2: (sighs, smiling) No. Let's sing.
